

Acknowledgements

The authors wish to acknowledge the contributions of others that made this study possible. The Center for Substance Abuse Treatment provided funding, administrative, and technical support for this study. Pat Roth was the project director. Without CSAT's support for the State Treatment Needs Assessment Program (STNAP) this study and the studies upon which it drew would not have been possible. The entire field has advanced greatly as a result of the STNAP initiative.

The study's project officers, Phillis MacMillan and Marsha Armstrong, helped out in more ways than we can mention here and showed great patience as the authors worked on the study. Roland Mena and the rest of the staff of the Addictive and Mental Disorders Division of the Montana Department of Department of Public Health and Human Services provided important insights into the State's planning issues.

William Riley, George Haynes, and Vincent Smith conducted the telephone and prisoner studies without which this integrative analysis would have been impossible. The authors drew heavily upon their results and reports; they were among the best produced by the STNAP studies.

Many North Charles administrative and research staff worked on the project over the years. Gary Houle, the Executive Director, has assisted in numerous ways over the years. Richard Labrie, Ryan Woodworth, Scott Ronis, and Steven Haddad made significant contributions to the effort. Earlier work by Stephanie Geller of the National Technical Center for Substance Abuse Needs Assessment created the foundation for the integrative analysis.
